“Spare Change?”

By MeCA President Ben Milster

You know the old joke, “How many counselors does it take to change a light bulb?” “Only one, but the bulb has to really, really want to change.” A primary role for all counselors is as an agent of change, which can be both the most rewarding, and sometimes frustrating, aspect of our job. Working individually with clients in the exploration of their problems and concerns, and goal setting, understanding, supporting and encouraging them is all part of the job. However, there is another aspect of being an agent of change that many counselors quickly and often embrace, while others may not perceive it as a viable role for a variety of reasons—and that is being an agent of social and political change.

Recently, at the ACA conference in Montreal, I was fortunate to experience the most dynamic, articulate and passionate speaker I have ever heard. Stephen Lewis, one of Canada’s most influential commentators on social affairs, international development and human rights delivered an incredibly powerful Keynote Address on Saturday morning of the conference. Mr. Lewis has held a variety of senior roles with international bodies, and the knowledge and tremendous concern for the people of Africa that he has gleaned from his role as the United Nations Special Envoy for HIV/AIDS in Africa was the focus of the Keynote.

During the address, Mr. Lewis spoke of the many personal stories of (especially) the women and children of Africa afflicted by HIV/AIDS, and the incredible devastation that this pandemic has had on that country. His passionate delivery of the many experiences he has had with the people of Africa brought me to tears on more than one occasion during the address, and also provided the opportunity for reflection on our role as counselors in social and political change. Toward the end of his address, Mr. Lewis told us that there is a great need for counselors in Africa to educate, support and assist with the tremendous degree of social needs that exist there. In fact, Mr. Lewis issued a challenge to both the ACA and CCA to mirror in Africa the work that our respective organizations do in our own countries, and start bringing more assistance to where it is direly needed.

So what to do? Affecting change, both in the personal, as well as the political realm, takes energy. I fully realize that although there may be many rewards that our profession has to offer, the very real drawbacks is potential for burnout. Our candles burn brightly, and sometimes at both ends. If one does not have a good supply of spare candles...well, then there is no room for “spare change.”

I am not suggesting that we all become raging political activists. What I am suggesting, though, is that there may be many opportunities to be involved in some aspect of social or political change in ways that are manageable. A primary issue at hand is awareness. What is out there that offers an opportunity, how can I get involved, and what can I do?

The first thing to do is reflect upon your own professional experience, and see if there are issues that you believe need to be addressed...at your worksite, in your professional organization, in your community, your state, or at the national level. “Google” an issue, check out your professional organizations, check out the ACA, or the CCA. This profession has to offer, there are many rewards that you can afford to spend.

The basic point to all of this is that there are a lot of needs for change “out there”, and as a professional counselor, you may have more expertise than you think regarding influencing social and political change.

Just remember, take care of yourself, and also keep in mind what Rabbi Hillel (30BC-9AD) stated: “If I am not for myself, then who will be for me? And if I am only for myself, then what am I? And if not now, when?”

Maine College Admissions Report

By Carlena Bean

Once again, this Spring, the Maine Counseling Association conference served as a wonderful opportunity to network, attend great workshops and relax and enjoy the amenities of the Samoset Inn, Rockport Maine.

During the MeCA conference, the Maine College Admissions group convened briefly to discuss plans for an upcoming summer meeting. The members would like a speaker from Target X to attend the next meeting. Target X has developed new recruitment, admissions and classroom strategies for the Millennial generation on college campuses. It helps educators and administrators explore the implications of curriculum, counseling, sports participation, community involvement and parental interest of Millennial students.

Jeff Wright, from MMA (Maine Maritime Academy) will arrange a time and place for the presentation, and information will be e-mailed to all Maine colleges regarding details.

What we know thus far: We will meet at the Hutchinson Center in Belfast on August 16th, 2006. Specific information will follow sometime in July.

I hope everyone has a good end to the school year and a relaxing summer.

Most guidance counselors have had to take one class in their master’s degree program that covers Career Development issues. Often, this is not enough to provide comprehensive skills, particularly when dealing with complex situations. A new credential has been developed for those providing career development services to youth and adults: Global Career Development Facilitator. The Career Development Facilitator course is a pre-requisite for this global certification. The course covers twelve competencies identified by the National Career Development Association as important to master in order to provide quality services to clients/students.

The twelve competencies are:

- Helping Skills
- Working with Diverse Populations
- Ethical and Legal Issues
- Career Development Models
- Assessment
- Labor Market Information/Resources
- Technology
- Employability Skills
- Training Clients and Peers
- Program Management/Implementation
- Promotion & Public Relations
- Consultation

Because the course is interactive and typically has a cross-section of people who take the course (see below for the variety of participants who have taken this course) the discussion is rich and often enlightening for all participants.

Cathy VanDyke and Jim Peacock have over 40 years experience in career development and are nationally certified instructors. This course will be offered for the fourth time in Maine and for the third time in a new format (approximately half of the 120-hour course is delivered on-line).

WHAT: Next Career Development Facilitator course begins:

WHEN: September 15 & 16, 2006

WHERE: Conducted on the Internet (with email assignments) and some face-to-face meetings/classes.

How: These eight live classes are spread out between September and March. You can check out our website at www.MaineGCDF.com in order to learn more about the course, the specific class dates, and registration for the class.

Previous class participants include:

- Guidance Counselors from Messalonskee, MCI, Winslow, Erskine, Mt. Blue, Lawrence; Tech Prep instructors from Erskine Academy and Lawrence H.S.; College Career Counselors from U.M.A., College of the Atlantic, UMF, UM-Machias, Unity College & Thomas College; Dept. of Labor Career Center staff; college academic advisors; Vocational Rehabilitation employees; Maine Educational Opportunity Center (MEOC) staff; Coast Guard Career Development Advisor; Adult Education Directors, Job Club, UNUM; and Maine Medical Center employees.

If you have any questions or would like to contact school counselors who have completed the class, please feel free to contact either Cathy VanDyke at 236-8463, cathy@peak-careers.com or Jim Peacock at your convenience.

Maine Comprehensive School Counseling Model K-12

By Shelley Reed, Maine Department of Education 207-624-6637 shelley.reed@maine.gov

Counselors across the state are making progress on their comprehensive plans. Technical assistance is still available through the state coordinator to help with any stage of local progress. Sessions regarding local implementation of the model occur at the MESSCA and MeCA conferences. Assistance is available through on-site visits and workshops. Implementation is 2006 to 2007. The model is available on the website for downloading the entire plan at:

Ø www.state.me.us/education/tdae
Ø then go to the school counselor section

Also available are sample time task analysis sheets, needs assessment surveys and step-by-step suggestions.
The April SAT

By Maine Counseling Association President Ben Milster

The April SAT has come and gone….Now what? First of all, school counselors all over Maine should be commended for their tremendous efforts to register students and administer the test. Being the first time that all juniors were required to sit for this exam, there were many questions and a few “wrinkles” regarding the specifics of the initiative. I know that my colleague in the guidance office here at JHS, who was the Test Supervisor, placed numerous calls to Dan Hupp at the MDOE for clarification regarding a variety of issues, and I am fairly certain that this scenario was played often at many high schools throughout Maine. By the reports I have heard, it seems that the participation rate was very high, and I am certain that this can be substantially attributed to the professionalism and hard work of school counselors.

Regarding the use of the SAT as a replacement for the MEA for juniors:

Are there still concerns regarding the validity of the SAT as a curriculum assessment? Most definitely. Do we still have ethical concerns about counselor involvement in the administration of a test that is being used inappropriately? Absolutely. Are there still questions about The College Board supporting this initiative in contradiction to their own Guidelines for the use of the SAT? Yes.

While we are still debating the use of the SAT as the MEA replacement for junior students, please keep in mind that, as counselors, our primary responsibility is to our clients, and in the case of school counselors, the clients are our students. As University of Southern Maine Counselor Education Associate Professor Deb Drew communicated on the MeCA website this past winter regarding how to carry-out policy when it conflicts with our professional code of ethics:

Basically, school counselors, by the very nature of their work are often caught in dilemmas where the policies of the state or local entity for whom they work conflicts with the ethical code of the profession. This happens with laws, too. (Example: FERPA parental rights law and confidentiality of client). Law and policy are considered minimal standards of practice. Ethics are aspirational and speak to best practice.

In this case an ethical counselor would clearly abide by the policy while working to educate others about concerns regarding that policy and, if needed, working to change the policy. In this case the basic ethic of doing what is in the best interest of our clients applies here as well. If, as is policy, our juniors do have to take the SAT, it is certainly in their best interest to have their school counselor assisting them with understanding this process and doing the best job they can on it. That school counselor may at the same time be writing letters, testifying and working to change the policy.

For now, regardless of the debate, school counselors in Maine are certainly deserving of much thanks for making a difficult test administration run as smoothly as possible. Thank you for all of the continued professional support and assistance you provide for our students!

Loan Forgiveness Takes First Step Toward Becoming Law

On March 30th, the House approved legislation (H.R. 609) to renew the Higher Education Act (HEA) for the next six years. Although large portions of the HEA were reauthorized earlier this year, H.R. 609 mostly covers the remainder of HEA programs, chiefly Pell grants and campus-based aid, such as work study.

As part of H.R. 609, the House approved an amendment sponsored by Representatives Patrick Kennedy (D-RI) and Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (R-FL) to add counselors and other children’s mental health professionals to a list of individuals eligible for limited federal student loan forgiveness. The Kennedy/Ros-Lehtinen amendment defines “child and adolescent mental health professional” to mean an individual “employed as a psychiatrist, psychologist, school psychologist, psychiatric nurse, social worker, school social worker, marriage and family therapist, school counselor, or professional counselor.” H.R. 609 also makes librarians, early childhood educators, and foreign language specialists, among others, eligible for loan forgiveness.

Counselors cannot receive loan repayment as a result of the House vote. The House-passed language must be approved by the Senate, signed into law by the president, outlined under regulations developed by the Implementing new models of school counseling that have a documented impact on student achievement and career development (e.g., the ASCA National Model and related state models) requires that school counselors have strong leadership skills and abilities. Leadership needs to be enacted at the building, district, and state levels in order to promote systemic change.

Institute participants will learn:
1) Models of leadership that relate directly to personal transformation and systemic reform (Super Leadership, Distributed Leadership, Transformational Leadership).
2) Leadership skills that promote school counseling program implementation at the building, district, and state levels.
3) Leadership skills necessary for school counselors, guidance directors, and guidance supervisors.
4) How to incorporate leadership into professional role and personal self-definition.

Leadership Needed
By Phyllis Worthley

As many of you already know the leadership for regional meetings of Maine Counseling Association has been weakened during the past couple of years. It is not surprising considering all that counselors do. It often appears that we simply cannot attend yet one more meeting. During the Spring MeCA conference new leadership was elected and is working diligently to strengthen these divisions. Although great presidents have been chosen for each division those positions need to be strengthened through the support of president-elects, secretaries and treasurers. Dean Collins has been holding the funds for all divisions and has proven a tremendous asset as treasurer for several years now for MeCA. If you are willing to serve in any one of these capacities please contact anyone on the MeCA board which is listed on the inside cover of this newsletter. Each individual on the board is trained in leadership and most willing to support and assist you with any of your concerns.

Many counselors have select regional groups that meet regularly or have supervision imbedded within their own districts but many counselors do not have regular support and do look forward to the regional meetings that MeCA offers. There is not a lot of work putting together 2-3 meetings per year. Many of these meetings are theme oriented and offer CEU’s toward recertification. Please contact one of the board members if you even marginally believe you could be helpful. Leadership positions not only look good on your resume but help you to become the very best counselor possible as you are generally in the know of change and updates in the counseling field.

Another position that is available is the legislative representative. If you feel you might be interested in this position please contact John Parkman or myself, Phyllis Worthley. Training is available. This position entails being a natural leader willing to communicate with the MeCA membership while keeping a good insight on what is happening in the House and legislature both in Washington and Augusta. Natural leaders tend to be competent, self-confident, and socially assertive. These folks generally adjust to meeting the expectations of the important people around them. They are interpersonally flexible and high self monitors. Once again remember you will be trained and supported. You need not have all of the qualities expected as you will grow not only in this position but in the field of counseling by giving of yourself to any one of these positions. You do have an opportunity to contribute to positive change within this great organization. Leadership needs to be collaboratively shared. It can also lead to satisfaction and empowerment. Help our organization to help you.

Please contact any member on our executive board (see second page of newsletter for email addresses and phone numbers) for further questions.
Attention All Counselors
Terry Mitchell, Past-President, MeCA

Have you heard about the newest division of Maine Counseling Association? Are you someone who likes to run groups or would like to learn more about facilitating groups at your business or workplace? Are you interested in trying new approaches to reaching and helping clients? If you are, we’ve got the information you need to know and the connections for helping you make it happen. The Maine Association for Specialists in Group Work (MeASGW) may be just the place for you. Facilitating groups is an exciting, dynamic and fun way to reach many clients at one time. We have some work ahead to make this division official; however, many tasks already have been accomplished. We have been awarded a two hundred dollar start-up grant from the National Association of ASGW complete with a start-up kit of information on how to proceed. We have already met the minimum 20 membership roster needed and with your help may easily double or even triple those numbers. Getting this new division started has been an inspiring and rewarding way for me to meet new people and reconnect with many counselors I haven’t seen for years. I am very excited about the possibilities of this new division uniting counselors from all walks of our profession. A year from now this new division will be nominated for acceptance at both the annual membership meeting of MeCA and the National ASGW Conference. If this sounds like something you would be interested in participating in and you want to get in on the ground floor of this new group, send me your name, address, phone numbers and email address to terrymitchell56@hotmail.com. I will add your name to the email/snail-mail list and keep you posted on future developments. The time for group work in Maine is “Here and Now” so don’t hesitate to jump right in, the water is just right.

Carol Dahir on LEADERSHIP

We don’t have to be cheerleaders running up and down the hallways, but we need to have leadership presence—even in a quiet, subtle way—visibility and accessibility are the key.

U.S. Department of Education, and funded by Congress before any money can be disbursed.

The Senate version of the HEA bill (S. 1614) has been approved by the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions (HELP) Committee, but has not been considered on the Senate floor. S. 1614 does not include the loan forgiveness language for counselors. ACA members are asked to contact their Senators to request co-sponsorship of the “Child Healthcare Crisis Relief Act” (S. 537), a Senate bill similar to the Kennedy/Ros-Lehtinen amendment provisions. Help with Family Conflict
Samantha Bragdon, Outreach Coordinator

Penquis Dispute Resolution Center of Penquis CAP

Most guidance counselors know that almost all parents and their teenage children disagree over such issues as curfew, choice of friends, chores and dating. Some conflict is to be expected during the tumultuous teen years. However, in some cases, family disagreements can turn into outright battles. These battles are often emotionally exhausting and can weaken family relationships, result in poor performance at school and lead to teens living away from home, if not resolved. Fortunately, mediation is a resource available to families experiencing conflict.

The Penquis Dispute Resolution Center of Penquis CAP offers mediation services to parents and teens in conflict. Services are free and offered to families in Penobscot, Piscataquis, Hancock, Washington and Aroostook Counties.

During a mediation, each party has an opportunity to express his or her issues and concerns and, with the help of trained mediators, work toward an agreement. Mediation provides an opportunity for the participants to express opinions and feelings in a safe and regulated environment. Often, parents and teens share thoughts and emotions they had never before expressed to each other. Opening the door to such dialogue generally provides improvements in family life. Another added benefit includes improving relationships, not only with each other, but also with teachers, friends, parents and spouses. Depending on the nature of the family conflict, the presence of a guidance counselor or other school personnel can help create the right environment for families to make important changes. Participation of school personnel is particularly useful when conflict has arisen over issues related to schooling.

The Penquis Dispute Resolution Center has been working with families for over fifteen years. Mediation sessions are held in a safe, private and neutral setting outside of the home, but in a location convenient to the family. Mediators travel throughout the five northern counties to provide mediation to families in conflict.

Coming Home
By Terry Mitchell

There’s something about coming home. The knowledge that you’ll always be accepted and those greetings at the door that say you’ve been missed. It could be the kids, your spouse, or even that funny old dog that didn’t eat while you were away that gives you that feeling of belonging. It is nice to anticipate and be anxious about being gone for a few days, but better to return to what you know is true. These are the times when we reflect on what is important in life and evaluate the paths we’re on. Coming home is powerful. Coming home is real. Coming home is something not everyone can do. We walk thru this life only once, never stepping in the same spot twice. I think this is why people say, “Home Is Where The Heart Is”. For the past six years part of my heart and one place I’ve considered home has been within the leadership of the Maine Counseling Association. I have made many personal and professional growths serving in these leadership positions. I believe those who have been fortunate enough to experience this kind of fellowship will say it was a unique experience. Coming home is connecting, and from where I stand today I feel very fortunate and truly blessed. I want to thank everyone for accepting me and allowing me this wonderful leadership opportunity with all the great memories of leading such an outstanding organization. Please let me leave you with this one final poem.

Harvest Home

In the ideal
it is a harvesting
this work we do-
a reaping of crops grown
from ancestral seeds,
a gathering of first fruit
from vines that trace their sources
    beyond geography,
    beyond gender,
    beyond the bleach
and blush and black of skin
and root themselves in watery grace,
in knowledge that nurtures us all.

In the ideal,
our classrooms fill, like cornucopia,
overflowing with the bounty of our grange.
Life stories, heaped among the text,
spill into hallways of our schools,
crowd the sidewalks or the subways
or ride yellow buses home,
altering the form of knowing,
changing heads,
changing hearts,
Changing history,
bringing harvest home.
